Kao Saelee's Story

Who is Kao Saelee?

Kao Saelee is an Iu-Mien refugee, who came to the U.S. with his family as a young child. Like many other Southeast Asian refugees,

Kao and his family were faced with the adversities of postwar trauma and settling in an underserved community, that led to his incarceration.

Kao Saelee's Story

What happened to Kao?

After serving 22 years, participating in rehabilitation, and treatment support programs, as well as working as an incarcerated firefighter, Kao was scheduled for release.

On his release date Kao's sister waited for him, but he was instead turned over by the CDCR and taken by ICE without prior notice. He is now being detained in an ICE center located in Louisiana and is faced with the issue of being deported back to Laos, the country he fled from as a child and has little connection to.

I have something I have to share with all of you. I have type 2 bipolar and I am sane and together. I live independently and I am about to graduate college and I am applying to law school.

However seven years ago I was feeling suicidal due to problems in my personal life and because of medications that were not working for me. So my Mom took me to the psych ward so I could get help.

Little did we know just how bad they are. I have been reading the charts of my stay in the psych ward and while I was reading I found out that my jerk psychiatric in the hospital said something so politically incorrect that it's almost laughable.

One day during my stay, I told this psychiatric was a man that I was a feminist and I wanted to do some political activism in that area. Here is what he wrote in the chart.

In the chart, under the section where he had to write if I was having an abnormal thoughts/psychosis he put down "grandiose, e.g. States she is a feminist and wants to be a political activist.

Not only is this guy a mental health bigot, he's a sexist. I have abnormal thoughts and psychosis and I'm grandiose because I'm a feminist?! I find that to be so disturbing and so incredibly sexist that he wrote that, on so many levels.

Having political convictions does not mean someone is grandiose or that they have abnormal thoughts/psychosis. Everyone is entitled to their political beliefs and convictions and I have mine. Feminism is based on the principle that women deserve equal rights with men, and it fights for social justice and ending oppression. That's what I believe in.

For this man to say that makes me grandiose and that I have abnormal thoughts, is what male doctors said about women in the 1800s. Gloria Steinem is a feminist, Elizabeth Cady Stanton was a feminist, Shirley Chisholm was a feminist, Hillary Clinton is a feminist. How is my being a feminist any different from these women being feminist? This guy probably thinks that these women are also grandiose and have abnormal though processes.

I thought we were living in the 21st century, not the 19th century. You would be surprised about how many practices in psychiatry that are not out of date. source

NEXTA Live and TUT.by shared unverified information, including a video apparently recorded to undermine their credibility

Law enforcement officers detain a person participating in an unauthorized rally in Minsk, October 18, 2020. (Source: Reuters/Stringer/TASS)

Belarusian independent media outlet TUT.by and popular anti-Lukashenka Telegram channel NEXTA Live have occasionally spread misinformation that appeared credible at face value but turned out to be inaccurate. Such instances send a worrying signal that independent newsrooms in Belarus are sometimes sacrificing journalistic precision for speed, and are sharing important updates from the ground without additional verification. As a result, it has the potential to undermine trust in independent media and create a further split in the Belarusian information space in which neither side is providing true and verified information.

Independent journalists in Belarus suffer from ongoing detentions and prosecutions when covering anti-Lukashenka protests. It puts additional pressure on newsroom operations, as newsrooms need to deal not only with fewer staff, but also a large information flow submitted from Telegram users. Telegram has become the central platform for information-sharing amid the internet shutdown initiated by the government on the morning of the presidential elections on August 9, 2020. According to the final election results, Lukashenka received 80.1 percent of the vote to Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya's 10.1 percent. The lopsided vote count, public distrust in their veracity, and allegations of electoral fraud led to the ongoing protests around the country.

Sharing unverified statements

On August 28, the popular anti-Lukashenka Telegram channel NEXTA Live posted an announcement that Viktor Snyezhcky of the Grodno State University of Medicine was fired allegedly because he publicly condemned “outrageous acts by law enforcement officers” and supported protesters.

Less than one hour later, NEXTA corrected the announcement and apologized for spreading unconfirmed information. The information turned out to be false, because Snyezhcky himself denied the fact of being fired when a local news media outlet Hrodna Life reached out to him.

While NEXTA published a correction promptly, the pro-Lukashenka Telegram channel Grodnynskie Slivy — novosti Grodno used the opportunity to dismiss NEXTA as feykomet, meaning a “fake-producer” in Russian. Three other pro-Lukashenka channels amplified the post.

Mismatching people

On September 10, the Twitter account of Dmitry Navosha, the founder of Russian media outlet Sports.ru, posted that Aleksey Kulakov, a member of pro-Kremlin movement SERB who in 2017 also participated in an attack on Aleksey Navalny, was spotted at a rally in support of Lukashenka in Minsk. Navosha had recently become a fierce Lukashenka critic in Russia and started a fund to support Belarusians fired due to their political views. Navosha's reputation in Belarus possibly led to NEXTA Live channel picking up his story and amplifying it. Minutes later, Navosha's allegation regarding Kulakov was shared by Rustem Adagmatov, a popular independent Russian blogger.

Fake-producer NEXTA screwed up again. Today it launched another fake, as if the rector of the Grodno Medical University Viktor Snyezhitsky was fired for his allegedly active civic position. Belsat wrote the same nonsense.

We have verified the information and we know for sure: Snyezhitsky has not been fired, the rector remains at his post and will continue to perform his duties. We advise no-so-media employees to work carefully with information.

In their posts, Navosha and NEXTA Live identified a bald man holding a religious icon at a pro-Lukashenka march and compared him with an image of Kulakov posted on Kulakov's VKontakte account in 2016. Adagamov used Kulakov's image retrieved from a tweet in which a Twitter user recognized Kulakov as the person who filmed an attack on Navalny in 2017. Adagmatov's image of Kulakov also showed a bearded man with short hair that looks similar to a man at the pro-Lukashenka rally standing on the right.

Open source evidence suggests that both identifications were inaccurate. The bearded man turned out to be Sergey Kovrigin, an IT specialist from Belarus who started organizing rallies in support of Lukashenka out of his own initiative, according to his remarks in a video on the pro-Lukashenka YouTube channel Let's Save Peaceful Belarus.

The DFRLab could not identify the name of the bald man but it is highly unlikely that the person is Kulakov. On September 10, 2020, the same day the photo allegedly of him was taken, Kulakov posted a photo of himself on Instagram at a roundtable discussion in Moscow that day.

Earlier, social media users recognized Anton Tarasov, the former member of Russian Communist party KPRF, giving an interview to Belarus state television at a similar pro-Lukashenka rally presented as a regular Belarusian. Tarasov later told pro-Kremlin outlet Gazeta.ru that he went to Belarus voluntarily and explained to journalists who filmed him that he was from Russia, but this detail was not presented on the video story. After NEXTA Live accused Tarasov of participating at a staged rally, he started to receive threats on Instagram and VKontakte, as links to Tarasov's accounts were included in the NEXTA's post.

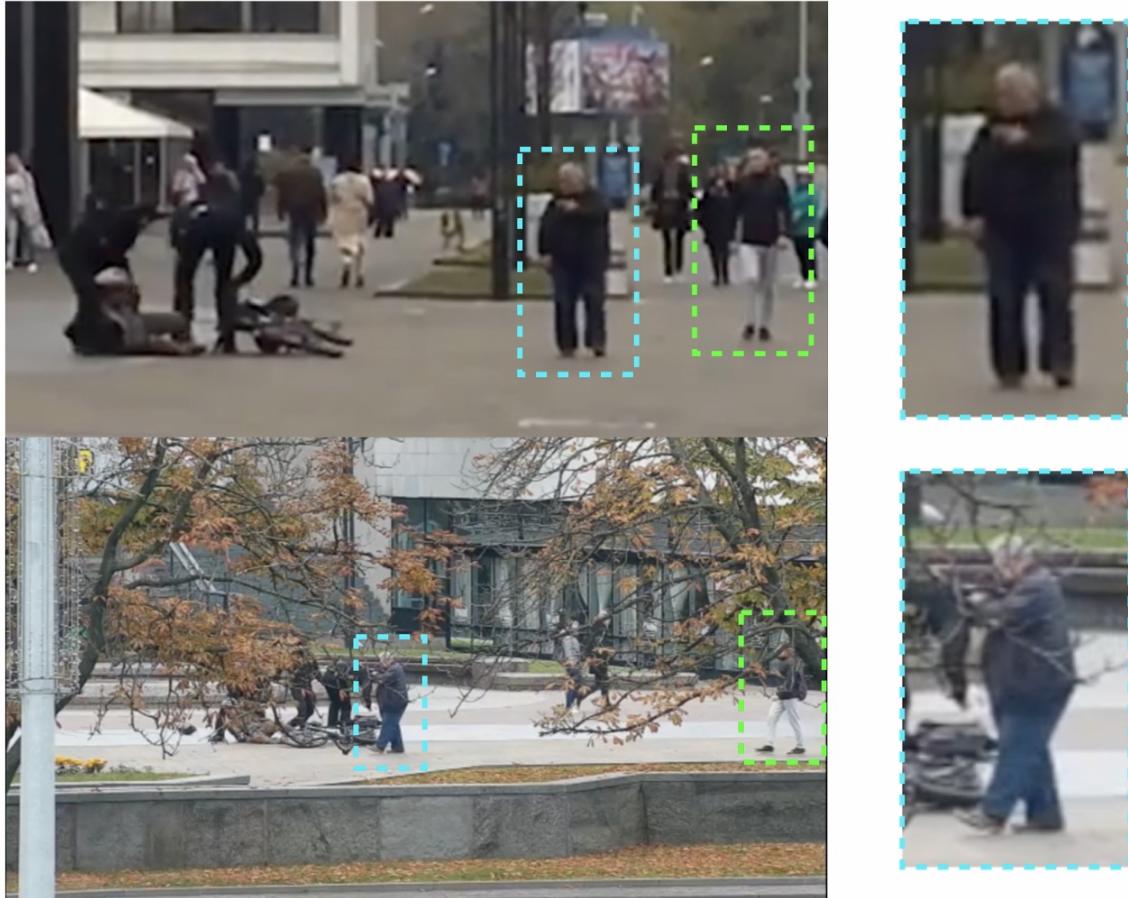

Both cases provided more reasons for pro-Lukashenka Telegram channels to accuse NEXTA Live of spreading false news.

Falling for information dirty tricks

On October 11, the day of disproportionate police violence after Lukashenka's meeting with political prisoners to discuss Belarus constitution reforms, independent Belarusian media outlet TUT.by posted a video on its Telegram channel showing police detaining a cyclist next to a cinema in Minsk. Two days later, the pro-Lukashenka Telegram channel TShT published another video from the same incident showing the cyclist skidding off his bike, with the police helping him get off the ground.

The DFRLab compared the footage and concluded that both videos showed the same event but from different angles. Note the people passing-by— an older man with his hand raised as if pointing to the cyclist with police officers (blue boxes) and a younger man in light trousers behind him (green box). Both angles match the location of the square in front of the cinema.

Comparison of footage showing police apparently detaining a cyclist that fell off his bicycle. Notice the matching people passing by in the blue and green boxes. (Source: @tutby_official/archive, top; @ToShtoTreba/archive, bottom)

The video amplified by the pro-Lukashenka channel, however, seems to have been staged. Inexplicably, it films the cyclist for an extended period for no apparent reason, with the cyclist skidding off his bike in a way that appears intentional.

Clip from TShT's video following the cyclist until he skids to the ground. (Source: @ToShtoTreba/archive)

The video showing the cyclist's fall was filmed from across the street, and the person recording it started to follow the cyclist nearly eight seconds prior to him skidding to the ground.

If the event was indeed staged, it raises the serious possibility that the first video showing only the moment of detention was leaked to TUT.by in the hope that they would publish it, so the second video could be released to embarrass TUT.by and accuse them of misrepresenting what actually happened.

Independent media outlets in Belarus that take an anti-Lukashenka stance, including TUT.by and NEXTA Live, are susceptible to mistakes caused by confirmation bias and the editorial challenge of scrutinizing large volumes of social media content and eyewitness footage from the protests. The ongoing detentions and prosecutions of journalists who cover the anti-Lukashenka protests puts additional pressure on newsrooms that fail to sufficiently verify content and prioritize speed over precision. As a result, it may further the split in the Belarusian information space in which neither pro- nor anti-Lukashenka outlets are trusted to provide true and verified information.

At least 19 women at a Georgia immigration facility are now alleging that a doctor performed, or pressured them to undergo, "overly aggressive" or "medically unnecessary" surgery without their consent, including procedures that affect their ability to have children, according to a new report and other records obtained by The Times.

The new report was written by a team of nine board-certified OB-GYNs and two nursing experts, each affiliated with academic medical centers — including those at Northwestern University, Baylor College and Creighton University — who reviewed more than 3,200 pages of records obtained for the 19 women. It comes just a month after a whistleblowing nurse at the Irwin County Detention Center set into motion a series of congressional inquiries and federal investigations into immigrant women's care at the facility, which is overseen by Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

The 19 women were all patients of Dr. Mahendra Amin, the primary gynecologist for the Irwin County Detention Center, the report says. The records, including pathology and radiology reports, prescriptions, surgical impressions and consent forms, sworn declarations and telephone interviews, detail and support the women's allegations of medical abuse by the doctor, according to the report.

The medical experts found an “alarming pattern” in which Amin allegedly subjected the women to unwarranted gynecological surgeries, in most cases performed without consent, according to the five-page report, which was submitted Thursday to members of Congress.

“Both Dr. Amin and the referring detention facility took advantage of the vulnerability of women in detention to pressure them to agree to overly aggressive, inappropriate, and unconsented medical care,” the report states.

Advertisement

The medical team conducted its review in tandem with a coalition of advocates and lawyers representing the women that has been investigating the allegations. The coalition members are from Project South, the Georgia Latino Alliance for Human Rights, Georgia Detention Watch, the South Georgia Immigrant Support Network, the Southern Poverty Law Center's Southeast Immigrant Freedom Initiative, the American Immigration Lawyers Assn. and Innovation Law Lab.

Many alleged victims, the vast majority of whom are Black and Latino, from the Caribbean, Africa and Latin America, are coming forward for the first time to report their allegations of mistreatment since a nurse at the facility filed the 27-page whistleblower complaint last month, along with the advocacy group Project

South. The complaint to the Homeland Security inspector general in turn prompted national outcry, congressional inquiries and federal investigations.

California

California police got hundreds of calls about abuse in private ICE detention centers. Cases were rarely prosecuted

A Times investigation found that since 2017, at least 265 calls have reported violence and abuse inside California's four privately run immigrant detention centers. Half of them alleged sex crimes against detainees.

Women under Amin's care were administered birth control and underwent procedures without their consent, including to remove their reproductive organs, such as the uterus, ovaries and fallopian tubes, according to the report and interviews by The Times with women whose cases were reviewed by the medical team.

Advertisement

One woman, Amanda, said she awoke from surgery chained to a hospital bed.

The 28-year-old immediately asked a nurse: “Do I still have ovaries? Can I still have kids?”

Amin had performed a cystectomy and “dilation and curettage,” a procedure to scrape tissue from inside her uterus, without her consent, according to Amanda. Her medical records show the procedures were done, but do not include a signed consent.

Advertisement

Danielle Bennett, spokeswoman for Immigration and Customs Enforcement, the agency overseeing immigration detention, referred The Times to the Homeland Security inspector general.

“Out of deference to the ongoing OIG investigation, ICE is not providing any new comment or making public any additional data regarding this matter,” Bennett said.

The inspector general’s office did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

Scott Grubman, Amin’s lawyer, said in an emailed statement to The Times that he is “legally prohibited from responding to anything related to medical care on a specific patient without that patient signing a HIPAA release allowing him to do so.”

Advertisement

“Dr. Amin strongly denies all of the allegations, many of which have already been proven false,” Grubman continued. “We have gathered evidence and spoken with various witnesses ... who confirm that Dr. Amin always acted appropriately with patients, obtained informed consent, and used translators/interpreters whenever necessary.

“Dr. Amin is a highly respected physician who has dedicated his adult life to treating a high-risk, underserved population in rural Georgia. Dr. Amin is fully cooperating with investigators and looks forward to the investigations clearing his good name and reputation.”

Scott Sutterfield, a spokesman for LaSalle Corrections, the private, for-profit prison company that contracts with ICE and operates Irwin, said in an emailed statement that “company policy prohibits comment during pending investigations” but went on to say LaSalle is “fully cooperating” with the investigation.

“We are confident the facts will demonstrate the very malicious intent of others to advance a purely political agenda,” Sutterfield continued. “It is well established that LaSalle Corrections provides high quality medical services in safe, secure, and humane residential environments, and our company strongly refutes allegations to the contrary.”

In September, Ken Cuccinelli, the acting deputy of Homeland Security, said in an interview that an initial review by the department found the allegations of medical malpractice were not substantiated by any documentation, but that it would conduct a broader audit.

Politics

Supreme Court agrees to rule on Trump's immigration policies, but not until next year

Trump's immigration policies were declared illegal by lower courts but were temporarily cleared to go forward by the Supreme Court.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-San Francisco) said in a statement last month that the emerging allegations of medical abuse against the women at Irwin echo "some of the darkest moments in our nation's history."

The Homeland Security Department pays independent doctors such as Amin, who practices gynecology in nearby Douglas, Ga., for the procedures they perform on patients in immigration detention.

Advertisement

According to the report, women were referred to Amin even for clearly non-gynecological complaints, such as rib pain or a belly button hernia. Then he “pressured” them into or performed procedures or surgeries that weren’t medically necessary, or to which they never consented, the report says.

In one example, the report notes that Amin performed a transvaginal ultrasound on a 35-year-old woman who’d requested treatment for hot flashes — and had no reproductive organs to examine because she’d previously undergone a total hysterectomy.

If women refused or pushed back on the procedures recommended by Amin, some were retaliated against, the report says, including being involuntarily sent for psychiatric evaluation.

Advertisement

Five of Amin's patients interviewed by The Times, whose cases were reviewed as part of the report, shared similar stories about their surgeries, and they said the doctor had a reputation at the Georgia facility.

“We found it to be weird that so many women were having the same surgeries,” said Shereace, 34, who asked to be identified by her first name for protection since she’s been deported to Jamaica, a country she left when she was 5.

She requested to see Amin because her previous doctor had told her to monitor her abnormal Pap smears. After she woke up from one procedure, she said, Amin told her that her fallopian tubes were “damaged and no good, and he let me know I’m never going to be able to have kids.”

“I was crushed,” she said. “I was hearing in some of the stories they were saying that he was removing women’s tubes without their permission. I thought: What if he just removed my tubes?”

Advertisement

She says she’s still not sure what Amin did because she hasn’t been able to afford to go to the doctor.

“Even before I went to go see Dr. Amin, I heard a lot of stories about him,” Shamekia McKay told The Times. “I thought, ‘I don’t think I want him to touch me.’ ... Because we’re immigrants, they just did whatever they wanted to do with us.”

Amanda, the woman who said she woke up from surgery in a panic, was born in Guyana, and detained at Irwin for 17 months.

She said that Amin had told her that her life was at risk because of an ovarian cyst that could rupture. She tried to ask questions, she said, but was told if she refused care, ICE would delay or refuse future medical care she may need.

Advertisement

“I felt pressured to do it; I signed the paper,” Amanda said. She said she asked for her records from Irwin officials to give to her attorney, but said she was never provided them.

She said Amin told her he’d just drain the cyst. She consented to neither of the surgeries he performed instead, she said, and no records of such a consent have been provided to her.

U.S. border agency said it ‘rescued’ a Honduran woman and newborn. Then it separated them and detained her Border Patrol agents said they ‘rescued’ a mom and newborn. Advocates say they took the mom from the hospital and told her they’d send her back to Mexico alone.

Wendy Dowe, 48, who was deported to Jamaica in May after more than 20 years in the U.S., said of Irwin: “They treat you like you’re not human.”

Advertisement

She said she told Amin, “I’ve got the right to know what’s going on with me.” But after surgery, she was surprised to see bandages on her stomach. She had to write to Amin's medical office, she said, to ask: "What type of surgery did I have?"

Later, she said she refused to get a surprise hysterectomy as Amin and others asked her: "How many kids you got? Well, I don't see why you can't take it out."

The independent medical review of Dowe's records conducted as part of the report found the recommended procedure was unwarranted.

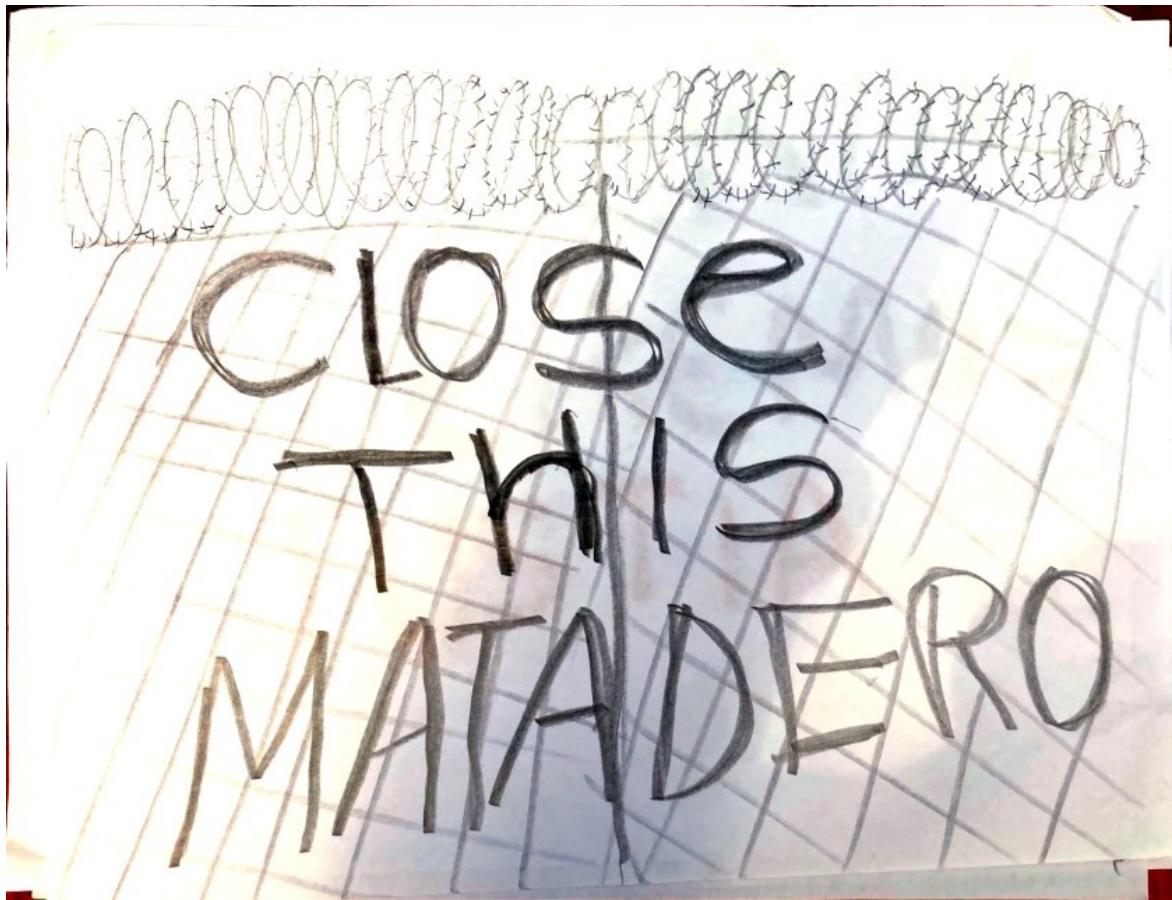

For most of the women, "Dr. Amin's 'findings' justifying surgery are unsupported by all other available sources of information," the report states.

Advertisement

According to the report's authors, as well as the women and their lawyers, several of the women were not given their medical records, which the women and their lawyers characterized as retaliation for their complaints.

Of the records the reviewers did obtain, many were incomplete or inaccurate, the report says, with a number of the surgeries Amin performed not recorded correctly or omitted completely.

Because the records produced by the Irwin detention center, Irwin County Hospital and Amin "appear to be incomplete," the report says, and because ICE and Irwin officials have obstructed medical records requests, many of the women do not yet fully know what was done to them.

Advertisement

Dr. Ted Anderson, director of the gynecology division at Vanderbilt University Medical Center, who helped lead the review, said the most immediate concern from the procedures is “a person’s future fertility.” For example, he said, “if you remove the fallopian tube, it’s a sterilization procedure, even if it was done for some other reason. ... If you remove both of the ovaries, you’re surgically menopausal.”

In the thousands of pages of records for all 19 women, the report’s authors said, they only found one signed consent — in English, for a woman whose primary language is Spanish. “This is unacceptable from a medical ethics perspective,” the report states.

At least 23 of the total number of women so far identified by the coalition as Amin’s patients remain detained at Irwin, and four are detained elsewhere, the women’s lawyers say. The rest have been released, either in the United States or abroad, or deported.

Pauline Binam can never forget what the doctor told her when she came out of anesthesia: “He cut it out, and I wouldn’t have kids naturally anymore.”

Advertisement

“I didn’t have to suspect anything — he told me himself,” Binam, who came to the United States from Cameroon with her family when she was 2, told The Times. According to Binam and her records, obtained by The Times, Amin had removed one of her fallopian tubes without her consent. “I started crying — I was in shock and a daze … him just making that decision for me.”

Binam, the first of Amin’s alleged victims to go public, was pulled off a deportation flight to Cameroon last month after congressional intervention, but remains still at risk of removal.

ICE uses Irwin along with the U.S. Marshals Service as part of an intergovernmental agreement. LaSalle Corrections, which runs the facility, also operates 25 other detention facilities, correctional centers and jails.

Last year, the Homeland Security inspector general found that ICE’s multilayered contracting system “does not adequately hold detention facility contractors accountable for not meeting performance standards.”

Advertisement

Inspection reports from the detention oversight arm of ICE’s Office of Professional Responsibility, the most recent in March, show that Irwin is consistently in violation of national detention standards that “directly affect detainee life, health, safety, and/or well-being.”

The inspection reports also show that Irwin refers more than 1,000 detainees a year for outside medical attention, “far more” than most detention facilities of its size, according to a New York Times analysis.

Lawmakers have accused ICE and LaSalle of “stonewalling Congress by withholding documents.”

Meanwhile, the five women who’ve been released or deported from Irwin are struggling to get by, and awaiting answers. For Dowe and her three U.S. citizen daughters now in Jamaica, “it’s been hard to adjust,” she said.

Advertisement

“Because I am an immigrant, and I’m Black, that’s why this happened,” Dowe said, but added, “No, I am not giving up. I still have hope that I will get some form of justice.”

South African man capitalizes off of racially charged disinformation

Deon Venter used at least 143 websites to make a profit by amplifying white victimhood narratives

A network of racially charged websites used narratives of white victimhood in South Africa to turn a profit. The website domains are owned by a South African company called CoZaNic, operated by a man named Deon Venter.

Two of Venter's most popular websites — SAUK Nuus and SA-News — both publish racist content. SA-News, which posts primarily in English, has an entire section of the website dedicated to an alleged genocide against white South Africans, while SAUK Nuus, which primarily posts in Afrikaans, focuses on farm murders. Venter also owns the domain southafricangenocide.com.

By using racial rhetoric and posting racist content, Venter was able to drive traffic to his multitude of websites. In doing so, he was able to either profit directly from advertisements or affiliate marketing, and indirectly by selling domains to the highest bidder.

South Africa's racial reality

The concept of white victimhood and black aggression is often used as a political ploy in South Africa, with politicians from both sides of the political spectrum inciting fear and anger to win votes. White minority groups, such as AfriForum, and local alt-right groups, such as the Suidlanders, use laws on the expropriation of white-owned land and the controversial notion that white farmers are being systematically murdered as evidence of prejudice against white South Africans.

In September 2018, South African President Cyril Ramaphosa came under fire after he alleged that there were no killings of white farmers and no land grabs taking place in the country. Presidential spokesperson Khusela Diko clarified the president's statement, saying Ramaphosa was responding to U.S. President Donald Trump's tweet from August that year, when Trump made claims about the "large scale killing of farmers." According to Diko, "[N]o one in SA is targeting white people or farmers." Ramaphosa went on to condemn farm murders in later parliamentary appearances.

I have asked Secretary of State @SecPompeo to closely study the South Africa land and farm seizures and expropriations and the large scale killing of farmers. "South African Government is now seizing land from white farmers." @TuckerCarlson @FoxNews

Diko also clarified that crime takes place in all communities. It is important to note that farms are isolated and far away from any emergency services, making them easy targets for criminals. While attacks and murders do take place on farms, these crimes also occur across the country, and, because farm murders are not classified as a distinct crime, calculating statistics on them is very difficult. Even politicians in the middle of parliamentary debates have cited different figures for farm murder rates.

The interweaving of land reform and farm murders to create a narrative of white genocide can be traced back to a white, Afrikaner survivalist group known as the Suidlanders, or Southlanders. The group's spokesperson, Simon Roche (who attended the Unite the Right Rally in Charlottesville in 2017) has taken responsibility for spreading the message of "white genocide" outside of South Africa, particularly encouraging the amplification of the narrative in North America and Europe. Roche and the Suidlanders believe white South Africans are already being persecuted, and are willing to fight if — or when, according to Roche — a full-blown race war starts.

While Venter does not claim to belong to the Suidlanders or any far-right group, he amplifies the narrative of a genocide against white South Africans. Venter's websites used derogatory language to refer to black South Africans and claimed the Black Lives Matter movement was "evil, genocidal, abhorrent and racist." He appeared to regularly copy content from other websites and edited it to suit a specific narrative, including websites that have previously been revealed to support right-wing propaganda.

The DFRLab has chosen not to include links and examples of Venter's racist and antisemitic disinformation and propaganda.

Following the money

One method Venter used to monetize traffic to the website was programmatic advertising provided by Google's AdSense service. AdSense provides ads tailored towards each visitor, resulting in a higher click rate than standard, static ads. It also allows websites using the same AdSense ID to be tracked as coming from the same account.

A look at the source code for SA-News indicated the website was using a Google AdSense ID that was shared with 124 other websites, including SAUK Nuus. SAUK Nuus in turn used two different AdSense ID's: one that it shared with SA-News, and another Adsense ID unique to it.

According to reverse analytics tools, the second AdSense ID was shared with 120 other sites, many containing the same two IDs found in the SAUK Nuus website's source code.

Overall, the DFRLab found three different Google AdSense IDs associated with 143 different domains, all registered to the same company: CoZaNic, owned by a man named Deon Venter.

WHOIS lookups for websites using the three Google AdSense ID's associated with the websites under investigation showed they were all registered by Deon Venter of CoZaNic. (Source: DFRLab via DNSlytics)

Venter's identity as owner of CoZaNic was confirmed in a 2015 ruling by the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), which ordered Venter to transfer five domain names to a Swedish company after it found he registered and used these domains in bad faith.

The DFRLab also identified 23 Google Analytics IDs associated with Venter's domains that were used to monitor traffic to the website. Some of these Analytics IDs were embedded into the source code of domains that did not contain Google AdSense IDs. This raised an important point: not all of Venter's website were monetized using Google AdSense. CoZaNic also used additional means — affiliate and referral marketing — to monetize its 143 domains. For example, an advertisement for mortgages on SA-News indicated the advertiser was registered with a South African affiliate marketing company called Offer Forge.

Hovering over an advertisement on SA-News showed the website was using an affiliate marketing company called Offer Forge to make a profit. (Source: sa-news.com/archive)

A closer look at Venter's websites showed they were created using the same template, and slightly edited to reflect the different content of each website. Many of the websites contained the same advertisements, which click through to affiliate marketing sites.

The four screenshots show the following websites:

- VolksNuus: Shows a banner for "SAUK News" and "SAUK Afrikaans News".
- SAUK Nuus.net: Shows a banner for "SAUK News" and "SAUK Afrikaans News, Radio & Info".
- SA-News.com: Shows a banner for "SAMatch.com Meet Your Match FREE Stamp".
- news-headlines.net: Shows a banner for "EuroWars.org European News for People, not Profits".

All four websites have a similar layout with navigation menus, search bars, and various news articles. The "SAUK" and "SAUK Afrikaans" banners are present on all four sites, indicating they are part of the same network.

Many of Venter's websites were created using the same structure.

When reached for comment, Venter denied doing it for the money and accused the DFRLab of supporting, among other things, a “globalist” agenda.

Copycat websites

One of the methods Venter appeared to use to direct traffic to his websites was via copycat websites and Facebook pages. By creating pages and websites with similar names to legitimate websites, Venter could count on the occasional accidental click to send traffic his website’s way.

A key example of this being exploited via Facebook was through a page called “Wereldwyd,” which imitated a page called “Wêreldwyd.” (The “Wereldwyd” Facebook page was removed during the course of the DFRLab’s investigation). Wêreldwyd (“worldwide” in English), a website created by AfriForum, publishes news and information to help South Africans living abroad stay connected with the homeland. Its corresponding Facebook page has over 34,000 followers, and primarily posts information from the Wêreldwyd website or content from other AfriForum media websites.

The page further aims to confuse by linking to a website called wereldwyd.com. The only difference between the website Venter links to and the legitimate website was the domain, as the legitimate Wêreldwyd website uses a co.za address. To further increase traffic to his site, Venter's "Wereldwyd" Facebook page primarily contained links to articles published by his other websites, namely SAUK Nuus and SA-News.

But the "Wereldwyd" Facebook page and website was only one example of this tactic. Of the 124 websites Venter has associated with his three Google AdSense IDs, several them bore very similar domain names to well-known legitimate outlets. For example, 5-fm.co.za and 5fm.mobi appeared to be copycats of 5fm.co.za, a radio station owned by South Africa’s public broadcaster. Similarly, users looking for information about Cape Town’s international airport might accidentally click on capetowninternationalairport.com or cape-town-airport.com, both owned — and monetized — by Venter.

Perhaps the most misleading site was Nuus.net, which called itself SAUK Nuus. (SAUK is the Afrikaans translation of SABC, the South African Broadcasting Corporation). Under the “Contact Us” section, the site does clarify the relationship (or lack thereof) between the SABC and SAUK Nuus, claiming the page was started as a form of protest against the broadcaster’s refusal to publicize information about white genocide.

When Facebook users click the link displayed on Venter's Wereldwyd Facebook page, they are redirected to a page on the SAUK Nuus website displaying all references to the word “wêreldwyd.” (Source: SAUK Nuus/ archive)

The redirecting of websites seems to be a common feature of Venter's websites. For example, EuroWars.org is a website linked to a Twitter account @EuroWarsOrg. The account tweets exclusively about conservative British politics.

But visiting EuroWars.org instead redirects the visitor to another of Venter's websites, news-headlines.net. The site is styled thematically similar to other “news” websites operated by Venter and contains the same affiliate marketing advertisements seen on his other websites.

A screengrab of the news-headlines.net website after being redirected through EuroWars.org. (Source: news-headlines.net/archive)

Similarly, the @CozaNic Twitter account links to a website called cozanic.com. However, when clicking on the site, users are redirected to another of Venter's websites, who-is.co.za, where he advertises domains for sale starting at R50 (approximately $3.01 USD) per month. Whois.co.za is the official domain for South Africa's domain name registrar.

Venter went through all this trouble in order to drive up the traffic to his websites: the more traffic a specific domain name receives, the more valuable it is to prospective buyers.

This is evident from tweets by the @CozaNic Twitter account announcing auctions of Venter's sites, with pricing based on the number of search hits on the website. The Twitter account also hints at the legal dispute with Match.com referred to earlier.

Description

CoZaNic.com is a new initiative aimed at developing the domain aftermarket in South Africa.
As a joint venture between BokWeb.com and Jislaai!, CoZaNic are committed to help develop a credible and respected environment for the domain aftermarket in SA. (The resales market). This will in turn benefit all players in the industry and accentuate the position that the .co.za domain name holds as the leader on the African continent.

See a list of domain names for sale at www.DomNics.com.
Please submit your domain names to be added to the list by responding to this advert.

The domain name CoZaNic.com is available at a negotiable price, advertised on another of Venter's websites. (Source: yell.co.za/archive)

Ultimately, Venter created a way to increase traffic to his multitude of websites by capitalizing off of racially charged content. In doing so, he was able to amplify the narrative of white victimhood while simultaneously turning a profit.
