Dear straight people,

You don't need a
'gay friend'.

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to look cool

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to be 'woke'

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to understand their struggles

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to support
*LGBTQIA+ rights

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to fight for *LGBTQIA+ rights

You don't need
a 'gay friend'
to be able to help them

If you need a friend,
you only need a friend.

They don't have to be gay.

Your 'gay friend' is just another friend of yours, who also happens to be gay.

By placing their identity before their relationship with yourself, you are already implying that your relationship with them isn't as important as their identity, which, frankly, is their personal matter.

Queer identities are part of the lives of queer folx, but we are much more than just the label(s) we assign to ourselves.

Value us for who we are, not just for what we identify as.

If you say that you don't allow emotions to influence your thinking, you're actually saying that you have absolutely no awareness of all the ways your emotions influence your thinking

I know this isn't remotely a new idea but I do believe that a whole lot of people need to have this flashed in front of them at all times like a neon sign

Emotions aren't bad things! Also it's impossible to be unemotional kind of in the same way it's impossible for an object to have no temperature!

You can have great intentions and still say or do something that is racist.

What reveals your real intentions is whether & how well you:

- 1) Own your actions
- 2) Do work to repair the harm you caused
- 3) Learn from it and change your behavior moving forward.

The image shows a screenshot of a Twitter post. At the top left is a circular profile picture of a woman with blonde hair. To the right of the picture, the name "Lucy Huber" is written in white, bold, sans-serif font, followed by the handle "@clhubes" in a smaller version of the same font. On the far right edge of the card, there is a small downward-pointing arrow icon. The main body of the tweet is a single paragraph of white text on a black background, reading: "Stop saying "start a family" when you mean "have kids". A couple is still a family. A single person and her cat is a family. A couple and their plants are still a family. Three weirdly close roommates could be a family. You don't need kids to be a family." At the bottom of the card, the timestamp "5:33 PM · 4/17/19 · Twitter Web Client" is displayed in a small, light-colored font.

Stop saying "start a family" when you mean "have kids". A couple is still a family. A single person and her cat is a family. A couple and their plants are still a family. Three weirdly close roommates could be a family. You don't need kids to be a family.

I am not the first person to say this but truly one of the best things you can do as a life long learner is this: when you learn something new, instead of saying "why is no one talking about this?" look for the people who HAVE been talking about it & amplify their work.

Woman: Yes.

Dudes: You have to debate each one of us for it.

Woman: No, I shouldn't have to.

Why aren't women told the truth about childbirth?

This is something that bothers me. Why is it glossed over and almost glamourised? Down played because "you got a baby" as if womens pain and suffering doesn't matter?

How many new first time pregnant mothers know what shoulder dystocia is? Or placental abruption? Or that over 90% of women require stitches?

For any medical procedure we ensure people have the info needed to make a choice about what they are having done yet it seems as if women are lied to on a societal level about this - nowhere in sex education, biology or even in casual societal conversation are the realities of childbirth discussed.

Why? Is there some fear that if we were told the truth we wouldn't do it?

calm down edgelords, the whole point of society is that it's not survival of the fittest. literally the point is that we're leveraging our collective strengths to lead to better outcomes for everyone. we've been doing it for a couple thousand years now

The survival strategy our species dumped all its skill points in is cooperation and community. Don't like it? Walk into the woods and die mad about it.
