Men who can't cook, clean, or even do their own laundry are not "cute" and "in need of a woman to care for them". They are spoiled brats so dependent on gender roles that they never bothered to learn the minimal skills to take care of themselves.

WHY IT'S WRONG

TO SAY: Feminists hate men

Feminists don't hate men. They disagree with enforcers and enablers of the patriarchy, whatever their gender is.

This is an attempt to undermine the feminist movement and reduce the significance of the work it is doing.

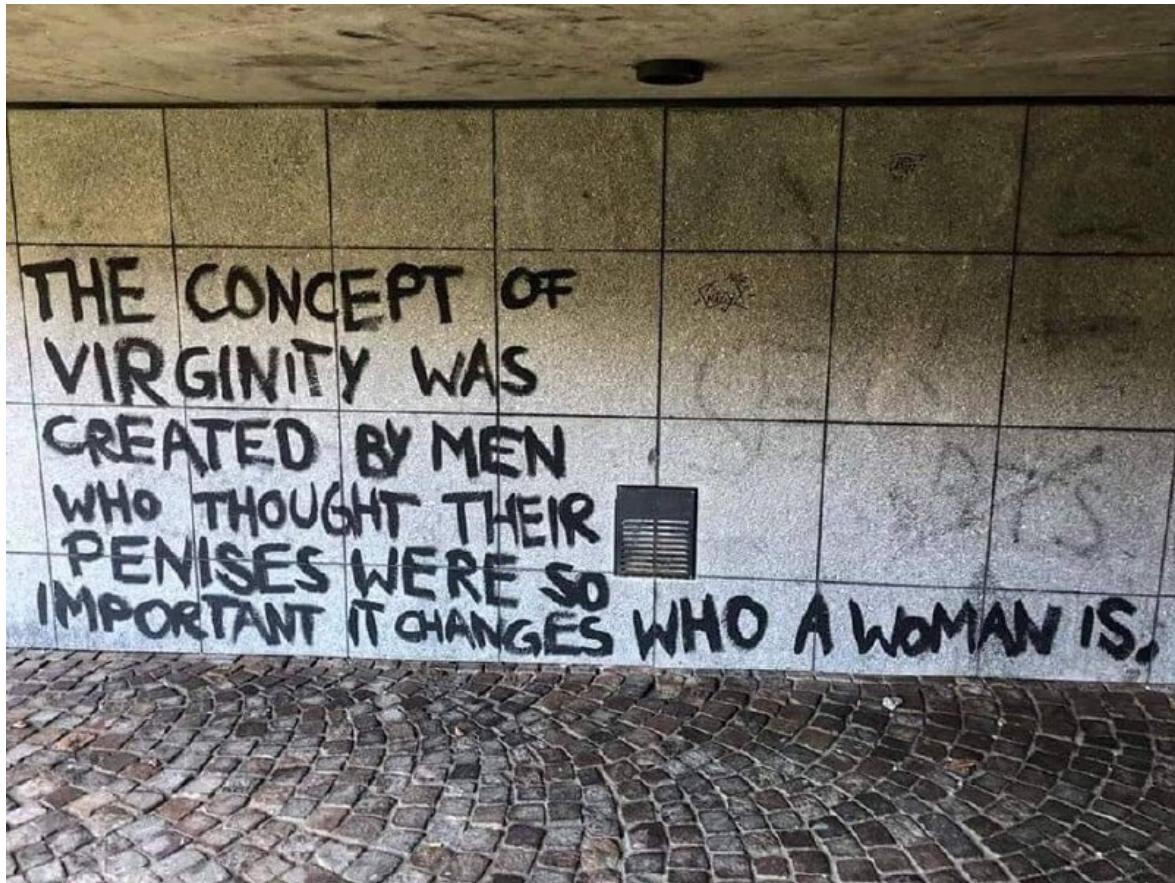

Feminists speaking out about men not confronting their privileges and holding patriarchal views is simply them calling out something wrong.

WHY IT'S WRONG

What you can do instead:

- Don't think of it as man vs. woman, but people vs. oppression and the patriarchy.
- Understand the difference between misandry and feminism.
- Know that feminism doesn't 'make' womxn the victim, it just acknowledges their oppression and seeks to fix it.
- Realise how sexism can also affect you and help decrease it & that hating toxic masculinity doesn't mean hating men.

It's strange we live in a society where statements like "Families Belong Together", 'Black Lives Matter', and "Love is Love" are political and controversial.

These should be simple, non-partisan, uncontroversial statements of truth.

The harassment, which started the summer of 2018, continued for a few weeks, she said. So she visited the university's Title IX office, which helps students navigate the federal law that bars sex discrimination in education.

The office helped broker a mutual no-contact order in which Batté and her classmate agreed to stay away from each other, she said. She graduated in 2019 without any more issues from the classmate. But when Batté applied for the D.C. bar earlier this year, she learned that GWU had told the D.C. Court of Appeals, which oversees admissions to the bar, that Batté had been disciplined by the university.

The only item listed on her disciplinary record: the no-contact order.

Batté alerted the D.C. chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which convinced the university to clarify the order was not disciplinary. But Batté and her lawyer say GWU would not agree to stop reporting all no-contact orders as discipline, potentially deterring future students from reporting harassment.

If you get a no contact order to keep a harasser or stalker away from you at George Washington University, the school will mark it on your record as "disciplinary action"

And then it will tell the DC Court of Appeals when you apply for the bar.

comment: Students should be able to report gender violence at school without fear that it will be used to stifle their professional aspirations later. link source

I'm thinking of all the ppl who knew Breonna Taylor before she became hashtag. The people who raised her, the people who held her, the people who laughed with her, the people who cried with her, the people who dreamed with her. They didn't deserve this. She didn't deserve this.

TOP 10 MOST GENDER-EQUAL COUNTRIES

SOURCE: World Economic Forum, 2019

UN Women: While some countries are doing better, none has yet achieved gender equality. We need feminist decision-makers at all levels to accelerate progress on realizing women's rights!

Daniel Radcliffe is Open To Harry Potter Return Only If J.K. Rowling Is Not Involved (Report)

Daniel Radcliffe is reportedly open to returning to the Harry Potter franchise, but only if J.K. Rowling is not involved. Daniel Radcliffe is arguably one

Instead, I was ordered to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for "a cup of tea", a phrase that every foreign journalist knows is a euphemism for a dressing down.

When I entered the room, my government-appointed minder Mr Ouyang was standing with Ms Sun, an unassuming, bespectacled Chinese bureaucrat. She poured me a cup of tea.

Ms Sun had a pile of my story transcripts sitting in her lap. She drew them out one-by-one, referring to each in turn: "Re-education camps in Xinjiang! Political executions! Imprisoning of labour activists! Experts labelling Xi Jinping a dictator!!!" With each story her anger grew until she was enraged.

The session continued for two hours and it was quite a performance.

Ms Sun claimed I had abused all the people and leadership of China. I countered that I didn't know how that could be possible considering the ABC website had been banned in China.

This infuriated her further and she went on to lay out a more serious charge: I had personally broken Chinese laws and was now under investigation.

The atmosphere was tense.

He dropped my passport on the ground in front me, for me to pick up, a deliberate insult in Chinese culture.

He told me, with a cold anger, I had an extension of only two months (I'd asked for a year) and then added pointedly: "Don't expect to return to the People's Republic of China" and "don't think this mess ends with you".

After a pause the woman answered: "Do you know that as a law-abiding country we have the right to detain your daughter?"

She knew she had total power over me and she let the words sink in. After some time she added: "I do have to inform you, Mr Carney, that we have a right to keep your daughter in an undisclosed location and I do have to inform you there would be other adults present".

I told her any attempt at this, and I would escalate the situation by involving the Australian Embassy and Australian Government, which was aware of my case.

When I was ordered to come in for a 'cup of tea', I knew my life in China would change

After my departure from Beijing I was reluctant to report what had happened because I did not want to put ABC staff at risk. But all that changed with the expulsion of Bill Birtles and Mike Smith, writes former Beijing bureau chief Matthew Carney.
